My name is Karl-Kristian, and I am currently working as a teacher while studying to become a front-end developer. During my studies I have quickly developed a real passion for web development, and can easily see myself making a career from this.

Before my studies I built some personal/practice websites with HTML and CSS which sparked an interest for web development. After I started my studies, I realized that the world of web development has much more to offer. I love learning, and this study has been really fun so far. I quickly realized that this is something I want to pursue as a career. I also enjoy problem solving, which is a big part of web-development, and one of the reasons I enjoy it so much. Another part is teamwork. I enjoy working with others, and some of my best ideas come while discussing problems or solutions with others. Clean and efficient code is also something I value. I enjoy going back and refactoring old code with new methods/solutions I have learned from my studies, to simplify and improve the code.

After my studies I could see myself working as a front-end developer either freelance or for a company. I thrive in cooperative settings, which is why my main goal is a company/team job. I understand that my studies will only teach me so much, and that the real learning comes from experience. As a freelancer I would be able to pick jobs and projects that I would enjoy working on, but it would also limit my learning potential. Working with and around others with experience is where I want to be.

As for other personal traits, my guiding principle is "If you start work at 8, and arrive 8, you are late". I am a fast learner that might ask many questions until I am confident that I have a good understanding of the topic. I also value personal time and a clear work-life balance.

If you have any questions or would like to reach me, don't hesitate to send me an email.

Thank you for your time reading this

Sincerely

Karl-Kristian Berg
